REMARKS

The attached background material on CIA resources devoted to counterintelligence was prepared for the DDCI for his use in discussions with Judge Clark on this subject. The nature of the inquiry suggests we ought to consider changing our allocation of resources to the structural category called CI. We presently restrict this category to counterespionage and a small amount of other collection and make no provision for protective security, analytic support, or information handling systems that contain CI data. Compiling information using this broadened definition proved to be a real challenge, and we were only able to respond to this tasking through the outstanding cooperation of your planning and budget staffs.

COUNTERINTELLIGENCE

NSSD-2-82 considers counterintelligence to mean all measures taken to protect against the intelligence activities of foreign countries regardless of method or technique. NSSD-2-82 includes classic counterespionage activities, operations security, and protective security. Although some may consider counterterrorism as counterintelligence, NSSD-2-82 excludes counterterrorism activities because of the different countermeasures needed and organizational responsibilities involved. The table below summarizes Agency resources that are in some way related to counterintelligence for the period FY 1982-FY 1984. 25X1
